Bem Vindos a Portugal!

Congratulations, you will shortly land in one of the most beautiful countries in the world. The Study in Portugal Network (SiPN) is pleased to host you for this January 2019 term session. Our goal is to help you and your faculty achieve all of the curricular aims of your program while leveraging our know-how and connections to provide you with co-curricular experiences that you simply could not find with any other program. Your time in Portugal will fly by in an instant, so we have prepared this booklet to help you hit the ground running once you land on January 6. If you find Portugal as intriguing a place as we think you will, we encourage you to consider spending a summer or semester or even an academic year with us during our regular academic sessions. As a four-university consortium, SiPN provides an unmatched selection of course choices in either English or Portuguese at a price that is cheaper than most other programs in Western Europe.

The walls are covered in intricate carvings and paintings. The ceiling is also decorated with paintings. The overall style is Baroque.

About SiPN

The Study in Portugal Network (SiPN) study abroad program is managed by the non-profit Luso-American Development Foundation (FLAD), with the support of the Portuguese Ministry of Science, Technology and Higher Education. It offer Ministry of Education and Science, the US Embassy in Portugal, the Fulbright Commission in Portugal, Portugal Global - Trade & Investment Agency (AICEP), and the Lisbon City Municipality, among others. It offers students the opportunity to spend a semester, year or a summer and/or more specialised programs in the Azores and Coimbra.

SiPN provides an academically rigorous but flexible study abroad program that is designed to meet the needs of undergraduates from a variety of majors. Its core curriculum is focused on Portugal's place in Europe and Lisbon as a safe and attractive cosmopolitan hub from which to explore themes related to the larger Lusophone community of some 260 million people.

About FLAD

The Luso-American Development Foundation is a private, financially self-sufficient Portuguese institution. Its mission is to contribute to Portuguese development by financially and strategically supporting innovative projects and encouraging cooperation between Portuguese and American societies.

The Luso-American Development Foundation was created in 1985 by decree of the Portuguese Government to establish a private, non-profit institution that promotes relations between Portugal and the United States in a permanent, flexible and independent way, in the hope that this exchange would further the economic, social and cultural development of Portugal.

Its initial assets were based on monetary transfers made by the Portuguese State, as a result of the Cooperation and Defense Agreement signed by Portugal and the United States in 1983.

About SiPN

The SiPN consortium is presently made up of 4 of Portugal's top universities:

Catholic University of Portugal - Lisbon

ISCTE-University Institute of Lisbon

NOVA University of Lisbon

University of Lisbon

Starting in Fall 2018 the SiPN consortium expects to expand to the city of Porto and will include:

Catholic University of Portugal - Porto

Polytechnic Institute of Porto

University of Porto

Our summer programs already involve the University of the Azores and Minho, and we soon also expect to launch a summer program in sustainability studies with the University of Coimbra.

Through this network, SiPN is able to provide a rigorous academic experience with a large degree of flexibility, reaching a diverse student audience from a variety of different majors and/or levels of Portuguese fluency.

For the UMKC 2018 program, two of our partner universities are involved:

Universidade NOVA de Lisboa (UNL or NOVA) was founded in 1973 and is the youngest of Lisbon's three public state universities. It is highly ranked and was distinguished for the 6th year in a row by the Times Higher Education ranking that elects the best 200 universities in the world under 50 years, leading the Citations performance and International Outlook indicators in Portugal. About the Founder: Calouste Sarkis Gulbenkian was an Armenian born in the Ottoman empire in 1869. Gulbenkian graduated in engineering at King's College London and in 1902 became British citizen, conducting much of his work from London and then Paris, but finally settling in Portugal.

In 1942 Gulbenkian left France for Portugal where he remained until his death in 1955. In his will he left his collection – a unique mixture of Eastern and Western art – and almost his entire fortune to a foundation to be headquartered in Lisbon and to bear his name. He wanted his foundation to reflect his interests in arts, science, education and social welfare and told his primary trustee that it should benefit not just Armenian causes but “all humanity”

Through its programmes, the AKDN collaborates with the Portuguese government, European Commission, civil society organizations and religious institutions, including the Catholic Church.

Ismaili Imamat created the Aga Khan Development Network (AKDN), a group of private, international, non-denominational agencies that work to improve living conditions and opportunities for people in specific regions of the world.

The Ismaili Centers are symbolic markers of the permanent presence of the Ismaili community in the regions in which they are established. Architecturally unique, each building incorporates spaces for social and cultural gatherings, intellectual engagement and reflection, as well as spiritual contemplation. They serve as ambassadorial hubs, representing the Ismaili community's attitude towards the Muslim faith and modern life, while extending a hand of friendship and understanding to enhance relationships among faith communities, government and civil society.

The Muslim heritage of Portugal made it appropriate for the Ismaili Centre in Portugal to draw inspiration from many influences, including the distant but familiar heritage of Moorish architectural forms. In particular, the interplay and combination of outdoor and indoor spaces give the building a unique aesthetic feel, reflecting the local context as well as aspects of Islam’s architectural heritage.
